A Bibliography of the Grand Canyon and Lower Colorado River

INTERNET EDITION
(frequently updated 2000–2015, removed 2021)

LEGACY COPY PRESERVED HERE FOR POSTING TO THE "INTERNET ARCHIVE," NOVEMBER 2025, TO RECORD THE CONTENT OF THE FIRST INTERACTIVE DATABASE FOR PUBLICATIONS ABOUT THE GRAND CANYON AND THE LOWER COLORADO RIVER OF THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

Introduction to the First-State Presentation Recompiled for the Internet Archive

The Internet Edition was created as an interactive, queryable database by the Grand Canyon Association (Grand Canyon, Arizona) and posted to its own URL, http://www.grandcanyonbiblio.org. The database was formulated from the 1990 Second Edition (and 1993 Supplement) of the print bibliography (Earle E. Spamer, compiler and editor, published by the Grand Canyon Natural History Association) with additional citations, corrections, and emendations accumulated between 1993 and 1999. (The First Edition of the bibliography was published by the Grand Canyon Natural History Association in 1981. The Second Edition was significantly revised and reorganized.)

For the record, two printouts were made of the first state of the Internet Edition (which went online in early January 2000); one was given to the Special Collections and Archives, Cline Library, Northern Arizona University (Flagstaff, Arizona), and the other retained by Earle Spamer. The presentation in this copy for the Internet Archive is slightly emended, with added introductory material, but the various parts of the bibliography preserve the complete organization of the Internet Edition as originally conceived.

Realizing a need to restore the monographic presentation of the bibliography, by which its entirety could be examined in context, and foreseeing the likelihood of the database being removed from the internet (which it was, in 2021, after a period of technologically imposed inactivity), Spamer created the Raven's Perch Media imprint in 2010. Raven's Perch was originally intended to accommodate that restored monograph. Editions of the monograph, titled THE GRAND CANON, appeared in 2012 and 2015 on CD-ROM and DVD, and on the new Raven's Perch Media website (https://ravensperch.org, created in 2018) in 2019, 2022, and 2025. Raven's Perch Media evolved to accommodate numerous other specialized bibliographies, a cartobibliography, and historical publications relating to the Grand Canyon and Lower Colorado River of the U.S. and Mexico. (The title, THE GRAND CANON, was contrived to emphasize the bibliography's uniqueness as a standard or essential list of works—a canon—a grand one, in fact, as there is nothing else like it. The title is also a whimsical allusion to "Grand Canon," the widely used typographical form from the late 19th and early 20th centuries that stood in for the also widely used "Grand Cañon," dropping the Spanish accent mark while retaining the pronunciation "canyon.")

Compilation for Internet Archive, November 2025

Presented here is a printout of the first state of the Internet Edition, which reflects the organization of the bibliography in mid-1999 when the text was sent to the Grand Canyon Association to be recrafted by a third party into the database. Software was created to allow online users to query the database, and to allow the compiler to add new citations and make corrections and emendations. The uploading process became increasingly difficult by 2015, as the result of incompatibilities with the software that was then 15 years old. Inasmuch as THE GRAND CANON had been prepared by Raven's Perch Media to re-present the monographic appearance of the bibliography, the Internet Edition remained static from 2015 to 2021 when Grand Canyon Association and the compiler (Spamer) agreed to remove it from online.

This Internet Archive preservational copy provides the entire content of the database that first appeared online in January 2000. The Internet Archive's Wayback Machine of course did not have access to the content of the database, thus the captures by the Wayback Machine show only the principal pages of the website, not the bibliography–proper.

Notes on the Format of the Bibliography

The format of the bibliography as shown in this file embraces a few unique features.

Bold decimal numbers affixed to each citation (for example, 2.1 or 18.42) indicate the Part Number of the bibliography (2. and 18. in these examples) and a serial number within that part (2512 and 42); the serial numbers for each part begin with 1. This served to uniquely identify each citation for future reference and cross-listings. Users will notice that within each part the serial numbers are consecutive. With every update of the database, however, new serial numbers continued from the last number applied, such that there was no longer a sequential progression within the parts of the bibliography overall. This is reflected in all subsequent editions of THE GRAND CANON.

Numerous other specifics are outlined in the section that follows, which is copied from the original website.

The following very lengthy introductory section is taken from the Internet Edition's website, reproduced here for its historical and bibliographical context. Though it was tempting to edit portions of it, the full presentation is retained for contemporary accuracy.

Welcome to the Internet edition of the Bibliography of the Grand Canyon and the Lower Colorado River. It is completely revised, re-edited, and greatly expanded from the previous two editions, published by Grand Canyon Association. Its appearance marks the 25th anniversary of the beginning of the Grand Canyon–Colorado River bibliographical project in 1974.

The purpose of the bibliography is to collate information on printed publications, audio-visual works, and electronic products that relate to the Grand Canyon and the lower Colorado River. It includes everything that (in whole or in part) pertains to, or mentions in context, these areas; thus these lists are part bibliography and part index. It is the most comprehensive bibliography for any unit of the National Park System of the United States.

The bibliographical project is built around a standard bibliography that, in the Internet edition, is electronically searchable. The bibliography is divided into 34 categories by subject. It is the only categorized reference list about the Grand Canyon and the lower Colorado River.

The following topics are included below: [in this 2025 legacy copy the links redirect to the separate sections in the present document; originally they redirected to particular parts of the website]

INTRODUCTION by Earle E. Spamer

This edition of the Grand Canyon–Lower Colorado River bibliography is different from an edition in the usual sense because, for the first time, this bibliography breaks the binds of the medium of print. It is a leap of faith by everyone involved—compilers, publisher, and users. Most striking is the fact that there is one location for this bibliography, accessible by all who have access to the Internet. Each user will have a specific purpose for looking at it; few will see it in its entirety. The ways in which this bibliography will be used, compared to its predecessors in the print medium, will be a dramatically new experience. There will always be the need to browse, of course; many people prefer to work that way. It is still the best way to locate everything of special and peculiar interest. But this edition will provide users with the ability to search and extract electronically, something previously impossible using the "hard copy" editions.

Topical Coverage

A bibliography includes whatever its compilers wish to include. Francis Farquhar's 1953 gem, The Books of the Colorado River and the Grand Canyon: A Selective Bibliography is celebrated—even revered—by bibliophiles of the Southwest. But there really is no such thing as a "selective bibliography," only an incomplete one. Conversely, there is no such thing as a comprehensive one; there is always something more to add or to elaborate upon.

This bibliography began in 1974 as a short list on the subject of Grand Canyon geology; it grew to be the present product. My decision to exclude the upper Colorado River basin is based entirely on my personal preferences and the limits of my experience. I know far less of the Upper Basin; moreover, I have not traveled much there. But within the region that it does focus upon, the topical coverage is nearly without bounds. Books, articles, and other items wholly about these subjects, and those merely of passing interest, all make their ways into this bibliography. The absolute criterion is that they must in some way make mention of the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River, in any context, however brief. This is partly a bibliography of subject-specific items, and partly an index.

I have believed for years that one cannot presuppose what is "most useful" to the user of a reference work such as this. The product must at least strive for absolute completeness, which means scouring everything for whole and included information. This also means that everything is added without regard to an artificial evaluation of either scholarly or practical merit. I do not feel that it is the purpose of this bibliography to selectively omit anything, because it may prove to be of value—for reasons unknown or unimagined—to someone in the future.

In the matter of a disclaimer, this bibliography is always a work in progress. In a few places, informational parts of a citation include an underscore, _____, thus. This means that the information is missing. Nevertheless, enough critical information is present to warrant including the citation in this bibliography. The compilers were not able to see the complete information either because the document was not available or it was an imperfect copy.

Many publications are not cited herein; some users will recognize this. However, the omissions are not matters of exclusion. The limits of exploration by the compilers go only so far. If something is not cited herein, and it clearly should be, we had not seen it. Users who know of more things that should be listed here have the advantage over us, and we ask to be informed.

Geographic Coverage

The principal focus of this bibliography is the region of the Grand Canyon of Arizona, and the Colorado River from Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, to the river delta in the Gulf of California, Mexico. The Grand Canyon region is taken to be the physiographic canyon and its surrounding landscape, approximately from a line north of the San Francisco Peaks northward to the Utah border, and from the eastern end of the canyon westward to the Grand Wash Cliffs. The lower Colorado River is taken to be the physical river corridor from Glen Canyon Dam to the delta, as well as the surrounding landscape beginning at Lake Mead and continuing southward with the river. These are admittedly artificial constraints, yet in terms of geography there are no simple (or clearly defined) limits. These are the limits established for this bibliography.

In using the Arizona-Utah state boundary as a northward limit I arbitrarily use a political boundary for a bibliography that otherwise has geographic limits. I do this also to include the entirety of the Arizona Strip (the portion of northern Arizona that extends northward from the Colorado River to the Utah state line), which has as much a historical relationship with Utah as it does the Grand Canyon. It is bounded on the north by a political boundary, on its east and south by a physiographic boundary, and on its west by largely coincident physiographic and political boundaries.

I also realize that the physiographic Lower Colorado River Basin, and by convention the political lower Colorado River, begins near the U.S. Geological Survey hydrologic gauge at Mile 0.0 immediately downstream from Lees Ferry. However, in that Glen Canyon Dam serves as a barrier both to the river and to the coverage of this bibliography, and that the river downstream from it is now amputated from the body of Glen Canyon, I bibliographically extend the lower Colorado up to the dam. What is left of Glen Canyon between the dam and Lees Ferry is its history. Despite the definitions of administrative boundaries, it is effectively no more a part of Glen Canyon National Recreation Area than Lake Powell is a part of Grand Canyon National Park. Lees Ferry as a geomorphological crossroads is tangibly linked to the history of the entire Southwest, but now it is only at the end of a road, straddling the Glen Canyon and Grand Canyon political units. Today, it serves as the sole entrance to the bottom of Glen Canyon and the start of one of the world's most remarkable natural and historical whitewater routes, through Marble and Grand Canyons. The distinctions of history and geography have been hopelessly muddled here. The best example of this, perhaps, was an error in a large brown highway sign I saw on the eastbound side of U.S. 89A, west of Marble Canyon. For a brief time in 1997, until it was corrected, it alerted travelers to "Grand Canyon National Recreation Area" (see Equusasinus, 1999).

At the western end of the Grand Canyon, while the physiographic canyon is dramatically concluded by the Grand Wash Cliffs, Lake Mead sneaks into the lower part of the canyon, stealing the river's historic identity there, too. Decades ago it stilled some of the Colorado's more famous rapids. Lake Mead National Recreation Area fortunately does not also steal the lower Grand Canyon; its administrative boundary is decisively if not necessarily permanently marked by a buoy in the river channel. Nearby, another historic river crossing is muted. The spot where "Pearce Ferry" slides tiredly into the warm waters of the lake does not mark the historic ferry site, now drowned beneath the waters of Lake Mead.

The Colorado River through the Grand Canyon—as well as its history and science—thus is pegged by two of the loneliest places in the country, places that only historians and bibliographers could love.

Excluded Items

Three principal resource areas are excluded in this bibliography.

Newspapers are omitted because there are articles in all major, and many minor, newspapers. In a few instances, a newspaper is cited if an article had been reprinted later in another periodical; the original source is acknowledged in a comment at the end of the citation. Special-interest newspaper-format periodicals are included, however—for example, High Country News. Weekly or other such newspaper magazines are also included in the bibliography—for example Flare, from the Arizona Daily Sun.

Internet resources are omitted because, at this time, the resources cannot be guaranteed to survive indefinitely, in the manner of printed publications catalogued into libraries.

Manuscripts are omitted because they exist as single copies in one location. They were never intended to be considered as a publication, nor gray literature. Some manuscript citations that had been in previous editions of this bibliography have been removed. But for the purpose of preserving these otherwise important reference sources, they have been placed in a separate, now inactive, part of the bibliography, Part 34. Miscellaneous Manuscripts.

Organization

The bibliography is now divided into 34 parts by subject. This is significantly more expansive than the 12 parts of the 1990 edition, Grand Canyon Natural History Association Monograph 8. The 34 parts are organized now into more logical groups, as shown in the Table of Contents. This was done partly in response to specific requests from users of the previous editions, and partly on my own initiative. For example, it seemed to make sense, from the standpoint of a researcher interested in a specific subject, to segregate citations about hydrogeology from the rest of the geological citations, because of the tremendously important work being conducted in the Colorado River corridor through the Grand Canyon. Some parts are exceedingly brief—that is the nature of the subject—while others are extravagantly rich with citations.

Creating 34 parts from the previous dozen may seem to be counterproductive by the users who search the entire bibliography for a particular author or journal title (to select two examples). In the print medium this would be true. But the utility of the search functions of this Internet edition eliminate problems such as this; all occurrences of the search string, from across the entire bibliography, can be returned. The electronic medium is not perfect; some searches will yield false returns because the search string just happens to be present in another context from the one intended. These kinds of problems are bound to improve with time and with advances in technology. In the meantime, they are usually little more than annoyances.

The "Miscellaneous" part of the original bibliography has been eliminated. As well-meaning as is any collection of "miscellanea", a list composed of them will be overlooked; or, when it is examined, it is looked at in a moment of desperation—an afterthought or a last resort. Most of the citations which appeared in the several subsections of this part of the bibliography have been transferred to Part 2. General because, after all, they are general in nature.

Other subsections of Monograph 8, such as the "Special Section" appended to several parts of the bibliography, or the separately paginated "Bibliographies" and "Reviews" sections, now have their own enumerated parts of the bibliography. Of course they should have been organized that way also in Monograph 8. But recall that Monograph 8 is a loose-leaf product, so designed to accommodate supplements (of which one was published, in 1993) that continued the pagination of each part or section. We attempted to keep the number of dividing tabs to a minimum, a matter of economy for the most part. This failed to significantly reduce the thickness of the pages inside the binder, and by the time "Supplement 1" was published the binder was filled. No one had anticipated so much more would be added to the bibliography so quickly. While plans went ahead to eventually publish a second supplement, it became clear that another binder would be needed. It would create a logistical problem for the hundreds of users who already had copies, and an expense for the publisher. Furthermore, users reported that even with just one supplement the bibliography was becoming unwieldy, with now two places to look instead of one. Thus not only was the prospect of an entirely new, third, edition entertained, but it was going to have to be an edition that could be easily updated and corrected; in other words, an electronic bibliography of some kind. The Internet edition is the result. Depending on the response to this edition, future releases may also include electronic formats which can be delivered or copied in its entirety to the end user.

Citation Numbers

The Internet edition provides an entirely revised form of citation for this bibliography. Notably, each citation has a unique number, or "citation number", enumerated sequentially within each of the 34 parts. The objective of the citation number is to provide a point of reference for all users, now and in the future. The usefulness of citation numbers is already long-demonstrated in standard bibliographical referents in American history, such as those which are cross-listed in this bibliography (and about which more is mentioned below). The citation number is composed of a prefix, corresponding to the part number of the bibliography, and a consecutively numbered suffix for each part.

Cross-Listings to Standard Referents

In the field of bibliography there are many standard referents to which scholars and booksellers, as well as bibliographers, refer. The most common of these relate to the bibliography of American history, or some part of it. These referents usually have the advantage of uniquely enumerating each of the citations, and it is by these numbers that the titles are referred in published literature and correspondence.

The Internet edition of this bibliography cross-lists its citations to several annotated bibliographies; these are Francis P. Farquhar's (1953) The Books of the Colorado River and the Grand Canyon: A Selective Bibliography; David M. Goodman's (1969) Arizona Odyssey; Bibliographic Adventures in Nineteenth-Century Magazines; Wright Howes' (1962) revised, enlarged edition of U.S.iana (1650-1950); a Selective Bibliography in Which Are Described 11,620 Uncommon and Significant Books Relating to the Continental Portion of the United States; Colton Storm's (1968) A Catalogue of the Everett D. Graff Collection of Western Americana; and Henry R. Wagner and Charles L. Camp's 4th edition of The Plains and the Rockies; a Critical Bibliography of Exploration, Adventure and Travel in the American West, 1800-1865. These titles were selected for their renowned authority and wide use, for the special precise and ancillary bibliographical data they convey, and for their annotations.

This bibliography also includes cross-listings to several booksellers' catalogues, viz, Five Quail Books (1987-1999), and Guidon Books (1969). The first two are important references to publications about this region because they are extensively annotated. That by Guidon Books is an important early list of publications relating to this region. That they also list prices provides some added utility as historical documents of econometric bibliography.

Citations in the present bibliography which are cross-indexed to one of these other referents are so listed at the conclusion of the citation. For example, "Farquhar 40" refers to item no. 40 in Farquhar (1953); or "FQ12:25" refers to Five Quail Books Catalogue 12, item no. 25. A complete list of cross-referents and their mnemonic notations appears in Cross-Listings to Other Standard Referents, below.

Cross-Index to 1990 Edition

Citations in the Internet edition have been cross-indexed with the page numbers for comparable citations that had originally appeared in the 1990 edition (Monograph 8). In the print edition each part is separately paginated. A cross-index is indicated by a notation between pointed brackets, thus: >Mon. 8: 1-53<, which in this case means page 1-53 (part 1, page 53). Separately paginated "special sections" that were appended to some parts of the print bibliography are cross-indexed with a notation like >Mon. 8: 1-SS1-2<.

Cross-indexed notations are provided so as to indicate which of the citations in the Internet edition had appeared in the print version of the bibliography. Many of them have been revised, corrected, or otherwise emended in the Internet edition. Users who have need or interest to check on these can thus follow these citations to the appropriate pages in the print edition.

Abbreviations

Perhaps of less immediate notice, but even greater usefulness, is the elimination of nearly all abbreviations. The problem of the abbreviated citation in bibliography is well-known. I have discussed some of these problems in a different venue (Spamer et al., 1995, Part 3), but I revalidate those points here. Basically, the abbreviated citation was a convenience of typesetting economy for centuries, if not so much to save space on the printed page then to expedite labor when type was hand-set and redistributed after the job was printed. In electronic media such economy is superfluous. Abbreviations also are now less intuitively obvious. Today, researchers cannot know of, much less be conversant in, the mnemonics of abbreviated citations in fields about which they are less experienced or which they are just entering. All journal titles are spelled out in this edition of the bibliography, as well as are other abbreviations. Only such conventions as "ed." for "editor" or "edition" are retained; each is clear in context and look very strange spelled out.

Suggestions for Continued Work

There is certainly a need for a database of citations organized in such a way that it is a comprehensive index of all pertinent subjects in every publication. Although such organization would be only as powerful as the competency of those who create it and the number of usefully indexed entries, its overall value would be immense. And the present bibliography can serve as a foundation for such a comprehensive work.

A thorough examination of some very pertinent serials is in order. For example, the entire run of Arizona Highways should be examined against this bibliography to list everything that may relate to the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River. Congressional documents, of which there must be thousands more than listed in this bibliography, need to be added; a daunting task, surely.

Manuscript and archival holdings are tremendously valuable resources. However, because they exist mostly as single copies in one location, they are not as conveniently available as are published materials that can be obtained in a number of places or through inter-library loan services. A separate bibliography of these resources would be a boon to researchers.

Lastly, the bibliography has to be extended to the upper Colorado River basin if there is ever to be a proper bibliography of the Colorado River. Even if it is restricted to the history of the rivers, there is a need for such a compendium of literature.

Why a Bibliography in the Electronic Age?

When Elliott Coues (pronounced "cows") died in 1899, it was in the ending times of an era of scholarship whose practitioners seemed to "know everything". Coues was one of these men whose experiences and capabilities crossed into a number of widely different subject areas. He is best known for his work in ornithology, but in the present bibliography he also is cited for some of his historical treatises on exploration in the American West. His productive energies are clearly shown in lists of his publications. Bibliography was among his scholarly pursuits, yet the sheer volume of it alone could have been a lifetime's work.

The art of bibliography has, particularly in the later part of the twentieth century, been viewed as a petty indulgence. It is a dramatic shift of opinion from Coues' time, when a bibliography was a staple among reference tools. The stigma which a bibliography bears comes from the fact—in Coues' day as well as today—that it is not "scholarship" in the sense that it may directly contribute insights to problems of historiography, nor is it a means with which to critique scientific results or scholarly interpretations. Only the truly comprehensive bibliography of a broadly recognized field of scholarship (such as Americana) comes close to being recognized today as a worthwhile contribution toward understanding in its field; for example, Wright Howes' U.S.iana or Henry R. Wagner and Charles L. Camp's The Plains and the Rockies. Even so, no one "reads" a bibliography; it is, simply, a record, perhaps embellished with some explanatory comments. It is a summary of all material known to be available on a subject, containing in it a chronological and literary history.

Traditional print bibliographies can be cumbersome, even unwieldy. They can be so complex that some questions asked of them can be answered only by constantly flipping back and forth in the volume. Electronic bibliographies are increasingly common, but often little known by potential users. They are useful tools for those who are used to browsing, or for finding specific pieces of information. But to use them to compile sets of data for supporting arguments, or for making meaningful evaluations of scholarly questions, requires a prodigious amount of data-gathering. For example, Stephen J. Pyne (1998) in How the Canyon Became Grand, used the 1990 print edition of this bibliography to collate statistics about the kinds of publications on the Grand Canyon that have been produced over the past century and a half. All this information had to be tallied by eye and hand, even if it was collected onto a computer database.

Which brings us again to Elliott Coues. His bibliographical work is all the more remarkable when we realize that his level of achievement was reached at a time when things were done by hand. I know how long it took to compile the first edition of the present bibliography on index cards, and how long it took to retype it several times (eventually into an electronic file in the late 1980s). I know how long it took to reorganize the bibliography from the second edition into the present product. Many aspects of the bibliography were done first by hand, then with the benefit of computers. And looking at Coues' far more productive work, I am impressed.

The collation and arrangement of references is mundane work, certainly, and only one who is intrigued by the printed word and by the rewards of reassembling information will find it interesting. After all, it still does take a living, breathing person to make evaluations of material to be added, skipped, elaborated, revised, or corrected for the bibliography. Coues (1897) admitted for himself, and probably for all bibliographers, that "It takes a sort of an inspired idiot to make a good bibliographer . . . ." He called bibliography "a necessary nuissance, and a horrible drudgery that no mere drudge [can] perform", and likened the drive to do it to "the appetite of a gambler or dipsomaniac".

I do not doubt that Elliott Coues would have thought the computer a savior of bibliographers. The work of identification, evaluation, and compilation still has to be done, but the ways in which value-added products can be derived from the main body of bibliographical data significantly amplify the usefulness of the bibliography. They very probably also increase the number of people who are likely to use it.

Looking back to 1981, when the original Grand Canyon-Lower Colorado River Bibliography was published, I never gave a computerized version a thought. In fact, all the draft and final lists well into the 1980s all were rolled through typewriters. Computers, then, were mostly batch-oriented mainframes, impractical to load up with millions of bytes of data just to sit and wait; most data were typed first onto punch cards and read as needed into the computer to be processed by programs loaded into it just for the job; interactive terminals were pokey contraptions with awful keyboards that had stiff, clunky keys; across murky, monochrome "CRT" screens data returned, noticeably character by character, from the core of the computer. And no one had one of these things at home! What became the Internet was embryonic, the limited domain of military consortia or hard-wired academics; it was still quite unknown to the world at large.

Even though this bibliography eventually was put into computerized files, it still remained as "flat files" in word-processing formats, just as if it had been typed onto paper; only then it was far easier to edit. Only when it was converted for use on this Internet Web site did it finally come into being as a kind of database.

I admit that it is difficult for me to rely on something other than five centuries of book production technology and the distinctly diverse ways in which books are read and used. The ephemeral nature of the Internet is scary to an archivally-oriented person such as myself, despite the unspecific promises of a world of data at one's fingertips. Now I remind myself that this is no longer a traditional book. For the first time, a user of this bibliography can find a fragment of something, or all the occurrences of a phrase, or things from a given year or range of years—quickly. Heaven knows this has been a boon for me. I can refresh my memory by searching electronically for those bits and pieces of trivia that lead to and hold together the important things. I can find those things that aggravate because I can remember only a special word or two.

Before the ability to search electronically, I could depend solely on serendipity, all the while gnawed by the knowledge that "it's in there somewhere".

The incentive for an electronic bibliography is no longer the pressure of ensuring unaltered survivability of static compilations of information. It now provides the future with a continually updated format, unencumbered by the methodological "edition" and the physical constraints of line lengths, paragraphs, page numbering, and bindings. It can be reused and improved in ways we probably cannot imagine now. I do find it difficult to imagine that this bibliography will be so useful that new compilers will continue it. It may well turn out to be only an indulgement of the turn of the twentieth to twenty-first centuries. Even Coues abandoned the work of bibliography, "forcibly divorced", he said, from a mania with which he could no longer keep pace.

I wonder how little Elliott Coues' bibliographies are referred to today. To my knowledge they exist only in print format. They are outdated by the passage of time, but I think a more accurate term is "outpaced". Bibliographies are, by their nature, infrequently used; and when used, rarely cited. They are, however, always present for those who find the need to use them; they do preserve past understandings of different subjects and the resources known to be available at the time. That also is the nature of libraries as they have functioned for centuries; one of their principal purposes is to keep information for such time, however infrequent, someone needs it.

Although even the role of libraries in research and everyday life is rapidly changing in an increasingly electronic world, I still like to think back to a book I sought in a library a few years ago. Privately published in 1815 by its author, Samuel Constantine Rafinesque, this copy had been sent unsolicited to the greatest naturalist of the day, Georges Cuvier, in France, whose ownership stamp appears on its title-page. Sometime later it was sent to America. When a colleague and I retrieved the book in 1988, the folded signatures were still unopened and had to be cut. This was not a "rare book" purposely left untouched for its monetary value to collectors who revel in the unopened volume; the unopened signatures meant only that neither Cuvier nor anyone between 1815 and 1988 had read this copy. Even unused, a volume in a library is there to be used. This incident, among many others, has guided my philosophy that when providing a research tool one cannot presuppose the value of anything to individuals now or in the future.

We may be overwhelmed by the preponderance of data available to us today. It is ultimately the result of an increasing population—individuals all—who in one way or another are justifying or validating their existence by producing written records—"treasures and trash" alike as Grand Canyon Librarian Louise Hinchliffe (1990) summarized them. Books, serials, periodicals, and ephemera all carry the cachet of publishers, too, which in turn authenticates their reasons for existence. A bibliography is a record of all such things.

Even though every good intention has been held to make this bibliography comprehensive, pragmatically it is not. The nature of bibliography lends itself to incompleteness. The very fact that three editions of this bibliography have been published, each of which include many citations that should have been found for earlier editions, testifies that the obscurity of references is due both to the diverse and broadly scattered material that must be found, often serendipitously, and to the growth of and improvements to the bibliographer's methods and resources. In 1878, Elliott Coues wrote in his unfinished master bibliography of North American ornithology, "Bibliography is never finished, and always more or less defective, even on ground long gone over" (Coues, 1878, p. 569). And, speaking of himself, but which the prospective bibliographer can heed, too, he concluded (p. 569), "The writer would be accurate; yet he feels the weight of Stevens's satire: ‘If you are troubled with a pride of accuracy, and would have it taken out of you, print a catalogue.'" It is a recurring predicament of scholarly publishing, even if hardly ever admitted. Malacologist Henry Pilsbry (1949) had the courage to surrender: "If you want to learn how much you can overlook or forget, just write a book."

So indeed, even though it may always take "a sort of an inspired idiot to be a good bibliographer", the nature of bibliography, and the ways in which bibliographies are compiled and presented, are changing in very dramatic ways. I would like to think that in spite of shortcomings that may be seen in this work, this is a pioneering effort, among many more that are out there in the electric web of the Internet. It is a whole new Great Unknown (in the metaphorical tradition of John Wesley Powell). We may even be overwhelmed by the amount of information in the Internet today, however tenuously available, and discouraged by the amount of uncontrolled, unedited, unreviewed, and uncorroborated information. But in truth, the only thing that can absolutely overwhelm us is the absence of information.

CITATION FORMAT INFORMATION

Each citation contains several basic areas of information, explained below.

Author Names

Date Part.Citation-number Title and information about place of publication. [Appended notes.] >Cross-index to Monograph 8< Cross-listing to standard referents

Examples:

Johnson, George Alonzo

Author Names

Alphabetization of author names follows a "one, two, many" scheme in order to accommodate published references that cite multiple authors with "et al." Multiple authors are listed alphabetically as a group regardless of the number of authors.

1. Smith, A. B. ["Smith"]
2. Smith, A. B., and Anderson, J. L. ["Smith and Anderson"]
3. Smith, A. B., and Zimmerman, J. L. ["Smith and Zimmerman"]

[All remaining citations are "Smith et al."]
4. Smith, A. B.; Anderson, J. L.; Jones, C. D.; Smythe, M. N.; and Betson, A.

5. Smith, A. B.; Jones, C. D.; Smythe, M. N.; and Anderson, J. L.
6. Smith, A. B.; Jones, C. D.; Zimmerman, J. L.; and Betson, A.
7. Smith, A. B.; Smythe, M. N.; Zimmerman, J. L., and Jones, C. D.
8. Smith, A. B.; Zimmerman, J. L.; and Jones, C. D.

The most usual convention for text citations of a multiple-author publication list only the first author's name followed by "et al." (see examples above). Thus, citations cited with an "et al." are grouped together. If all citations were listed strictly alphabetically, the above example would be listed in this order: 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 3, 8.

For each author or unique combination of authors, citations are listed chronologically by year. Within each year, however, references are not necessarily chronological. Under "Anonymous", though, an attempt has been made to list citations chronologically within a year because of the large number of them.

"Anonymous" is used in place of an author's name when the article or publication has no by-line, even if other evidence provides the author's name to us. In that case, the author's name is given in square brackets. This is done this way in order to indicate the total amount of factual information which appears in the publication, without interpretation.

Date

A year is usually listed here. If a publication was printed in parts in more than one year, its individually published parts are cited separately. When necessary to retain the citation as one, the first year is listed in the "date" field, and the year range is given within square brackets as a comment at the end of the citation. When underscores, "____", appear in this field, the information is lacking. "No Date" indicates that the publication has no stated date of publication; but when circumstantial or other indirect information provides the date or a date range, such information is added in square brackets as a comment at the end of the citation.

"____" and "No Date" items are listed before dated items to order to bring attention to them.

Part and Citation Number

Each number is unique. Every part of the bibliography is numbered, from 1 to 34 (see the Table of Contents). Every citation within a part is numbered consecutively beginning with 1. Thus, 21.1436 indicates Part 21 (Geology), no. 1436. An original plan was to consecutively enumerate the citations through the entire bibliography, from 1 to 20,000+, but sorted returns in an electronic format, and screen pauses on a browsing search, do not clearly indicate to which part the citation belongs; the prefixed part number resolves the problem.

In a few instances, a citation number will appear within the citation field, as part of a comment in square brackets. These are inserted for related, but separately published documents. For example, the abstract of a doctoral dissertation published in Dissertation Abstracts International will appear as an additional comment in the main entry for the dissertation itself. In other instances, separately published translation booklets accompanying an English-language publication, each usually with its own translators and sometimes with different imprints, are appended to the main entry for the publication.

Citation

In every instance, the title of an article or book is immutable. In this bibliography, italics convey the name under which the publication is most likely to be found in a library. Full, complex titles are cited unless special circumstances call for the use of an ellipsis (. . .), such as to omit lengthy lists of an author's academic credentials or scholarly affiliations printed on a title-page. In some instances where our citations are received through another authority who used an ellipsis, and we have not examined the title ourselves, we retain the ellipsis without remark. Where an ellipsis is actually a part of the title, we so indicate with an annotation to that effect. Little standardization has been employed in citing article and book titles in this bibliography, so as to maintain precision; an exception is the insertion or spelling out of "Volume" where such is necessary, and similar contextual changes. Typographical errors are denoted by the interjection or suffix "[sic]".

"U.S." is used as a prefix to titles that are from federal government agencies of the United States of America, whether or not "U.S." or "United States" is part of the name or title; for example, the Government Printing Office in Washington, D.C. is cited as "U.S. Government Printing Office", or the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is cited as "U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration". In some cases, for standardization "U.S." is used as a contraction in a serial title or agency name where "United States" is spelled out; for example, "U.S. National Academy of Sciences". However, in book and article titles "U.S." and "United States" are cited as they appear in the title; this includes variations of abbreviations, such as "USA" and "U.S.A."

City names in the place of publication are listed with the state in which they occur (for example, "St. George, Utah"); this is done to facilitate more ease of use among those who may be less well informed regarding American geographic locations. Exceptions are major world cities and certain frequently cited regional cities which, for pragmatic reasons, are listed just by the city name: Albuquerque (New Mexico), Chicago (Illinois), Denver (Colorado), Las Vegas (Nevada), Los Angeles (California), New York (New York), Philadelphia (Pennsylvania), Phoenix (Arizona), Salt Lake City (Utah), San Francisco (California), and Tucson (Arizona). Outside of the United States, with the exception of major world cities such as London and Paris, places of publication are listed as given in the publication.

Appended Notes

Special bibliographical information, explanatory notes, or bibliographer's special comments are appended to the citation; these appear within [square brackets].

Cross-Index to GCNHA Monograph 8

Numbers within pointed brackets—such as >Mon. 8: 3-28<—indicate the page number on which the same citation appeared in the loose-leaf 1990 edition of the Grand Canyon–Lower Colorado River bibliography (Grand Canyon Natural History Association Monograph 8) and Supplement 1 (1993) to that edition. Pagination in that edition was consecutive within each of 12 parts, as well as within several separate sub-sections. The page numbers are as printed at the bottom of each page, thus ">Mon. 8: 3-28<", indicating page 3-28, refers to page 28 of Part 3. Other number styles reflect other portions of the bibliography; for example, ">Mon. 8: xxvii<" refers to a Roman-numeral page number or ">Mon. 8: Reviews-3<" refers to page 3 of the separately paginated "Reviews" section. Some section references are contracted here for aesthetic reasons—for example ">Mon. 8: 1-SS2-2<" refers to Part 1, Special Section 2, page 2. (In Monograph 8 this was an admittedly cumbersome and awkwardly citable page number that was printed on the page thus: "1-Special Section 2-2".)

[Note added in 2025: The cross-listings were significantly revised in later editions of THE GRAND CANON*, such that they less confusingly cited (for example)*, "Cited GCNHA Monograph 8: page 3-28". Further, later editions of THE GRAND CANON added cross-listings to the bibliography's 1981 First Edition, as "Cited GCNHA Monograph 2: page x".]

The organization of parts of the bibliography has been completely changed from that of Monograph 8. Additionally, a citation listed in the present bibliography may have been transferred from another subject area of the bibliography. Many citations have been edited or corrected from the way they appeared in the earlier publications. Citations which have no numbers in pointed brackets have been added after the 1993 supplement was prepared.

CROSS-LISTINGS TO OTHER STANDARD REFERENTS

Several important annotated bibliographies of Americana are cross-listed in this bibliography. These titles were selected for the special bibliographical data they convey, or, in the case of Howes, which is only marginally annotated, because it is a standard list of publications to which scholars, booksellers, and other bibliographical users and researchers routinely and conveniently refer. Each of these other bibliographies is numerically organized; it is by these numbers that users unambiguously refer to publications in question.

This bibliography also includes cross-listings to several booksellers' catalogues, viz, Five Quail Books, Five Quail Books—West, and Guidon Books. These are important references to publications about this region because they are extensively annotated or, in the case of Guidon Books, an important early list of publications relating to this region. (In the fall of 1999 Five Quail Books—West reverted to its original name, Five Quail Books.)

The omission of other important bibliographies—for example, Yates and Marshall (The Lower Colorado River: A bibliography, 1974) and Powell (An Arizona gathering II, 1950-1969; an annotated bibliography, 1973)—is intentional because they are not annotated or have insufficient annotations to make a cross-listing to them meaningful as sources of more bibliographical information. This is solely a means of expediting a bibliographer's work. The information included in these other publications is nonetheless valuable because they relate to materials or regions not covered by the present bibliography. They provide additional worth through their existence as bibliographies; each is another bibliographer's historical perspective.

Bibliographies and Catalogues Cross-listed in This Bibliography

In the bibliography, cross-listed items are appended to the end of individual citations using the shortened forms listed in the left column below. This is followed by the numbered listing in the indicated publication. For example, FQ4:176 is no. 176 in Five Quail Books Catalogue Four.

Farquhar Farquhar, Francis P. 1953. The books of the Colorado River and the Grand Canyon: a selective bibliography. Los Angeles: Glen Dawson, 75 pp.

To the aficionado of the Grand Canyon and the Colorado River, "Farquhar" is a household name. Although his was not the first bibliography of the subject, it was the first to provide some substance of use to bibliophiles and literary scholars. Book collectors and dealers alike use the enumerated entries as a shorthand for unambiguously communicating to their audiences just which title to which they refer. Indeed, Farquhar's volume is itself a collectible, one which demands increasingly higher prices. While the book is sought by many, its value as a bibliography is shortened both by its arbitrary, admittedly "selective" content and by the passage of time. It is nevertheless the gem among Grand Canyon-Colorado River bibliographies.

FQ... [Catalogues from Five Quail Books and from Five Quail Books—West. Catalogues 1-9 by Clement David Hellyer. Catalogues 10 ff by Daniel F. Cassidy and Diane Cassidy. Denoted by volume or supplement number as listed below.]

The "Five Quail" series of catalogues are among the most useful resources on the literature of the Southwest, specifically, the Grand Canyon and the Colorado River. Their purpose as catalogues is both a shortcoming and a strong point with respect to their use as bibliographical resources. They clearly cannot be a comprehensive list of titles because they reflect only those things which are offered for sale; but they include annotations about virtually all titles—without these the catalogues would not be cross-listed in the present bibliography. The information about pricing is also a useful guide for those interested in aspects of econometric bibliography.

FQ13A 1999. Western Americana—The Grand Canyon of Arizona, the Colorado River, the Colorado Plateau. Summer 1999. Phoenix: Five Quail Books—West, [16] pp.

Goodman Goodman, David M. 1969. Arizona odyssey; bibliographic adventures in nineteenth-century magazines. Tempe, Arizona: Arizona Historical Foundation, 360 pp.

The brief annotations included with many of Goodman's citations provide added value to this volume. Although there are errors throughout, the list is still a worthwhile and still the most comprehensive such working reference for all who deal with the subject.

Guidon Guidon Books. 1969. The Colorado River people and places; a catalogue of books, pamphlets, maps and manuscripts (introduction by C. Gregory Crampton). Scottsdale, Arizona: Guidon Books, 84 [85] pp.

The very brief annotations to some titles add marginally more usefulness to this catalogue, but it is among the first such dealer's lists—if it is not the first—about the literature of the Grand Canyon and the Colorado River. The list, as well as the pricing information, makes it a useful companion to the Five Quail catalogues that began in 1987.

Howes Howes, Wright (compiler). 1962. U.S.iana (1650-1950); a selective bibliography in which are described 11,620 uncommon and significant books relating to the continental portion of the United States. New York: R. R. Bowker Co., for The Newberry Library, revised, enlarged ed., 652 pp.

The title, "U.S.iana", has rightly been looked at with cocked heads since it was first printed in 1954; Wright Howes defends his neological focusing of "Americana" in his foreword (and he clearly was successful in defending it with his publisher). This is probably the most widely used bibliographical reference work among book dealers; its enumerated citations have become a standard by which dealers and buyers can unambiguously refer to bibliographically well-researched and documented titles.

Storm Storm, Colton (compiler). 1968. A catalogue of the Everett D. Graff collection of western Americana. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, for The Newberry Library, 854 pp.

This is as much a "selective" list as is Farquhar's bibliography. It covers only the contents of one collection of books (however exquisitely comprehensive). Its enumerated, extensive bibliographical annotations make this a valuable reference work for those who have not seen the titles cited therein, or who have need to compare the bibliographical information among editions and printings.

Wagner-Camp Wagner, Henry R., and Camp, Charles L. 1982. The Plains and the Rockies; a critical bibliography of exploration, adventure and travel in the American West, 1800-1865. San Francisco: John Howell—Books, 4th ed., 745 pp.

The generous type size used throughout this volume makes this a handsome work, though one does question its lack of economy given the $150.00 price of the book. The precise bibliographical citations make it the closest substitute for having the title-pages in front of the reader. As with other enumerated bibliographies, the numbered entries are often referred to in catalogues and bibliographical works.

KINDS OF CITATIONS

In the examples which follow here, primary entry names (authors) have been omitted for aesthetic reasons. A box (☐) is substituted for the citation number. Refer to Citation Format Information for specifics about the construction and contents of all parts of the bibliographical citation.

Where necessary, or if only such information was available, month(s) of issue are included within parentheses; e.g., "21(October):5-9". In most cases the issue number correlates with the month of the year (e.g., (3) is March); variations when known are indicated, e.g. (1)(July).

Series numbers, where applicable, are included before the volume number:

☐ Geology of the east-central part of the Spring Mountain Range, Nevada. American Journal of Science, 5th Series, 17:326-341.

☐ [Review of] "Exploration of the Colorado River of the West and its Tributaries. Report to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. By J. W. Powell." Geological Magazine (London), new series, Decade 2, 3:365-370.

Abstract

A published abstract has the suffix "[abstract]" added to the paper's title, except when "Abstracts" already appears as part of the volume's title. Citations of an abstract of a thesis or dissertation that was separately published in Masters Abstracts International or Dissertation Abstracts International is appended to the citation for the thesis or dissertation.

Scholarly-Symposium Publication

There are many variations of titles of symposium proceedings, field guides, and other scholarly-meeting volumes—and about as many methods of citing them. This bibliography attempts to remain as faithful as possible to the ways in which the titles and additional publication data are written, rather than invent a standardized citation. This method may be more advantageous because some libraries may catalogue them in different ways which depend upon the skill of the cataloguers as well as the organizational schemes used in the library. In this manner, the actual title or data from the document can be referred to in such a way that the local librarian can examine it and determine how it might have been catalogued there.

Some such publications were more traditionally published, as separately citable, separately sold books that happen also to be symposia proceedings. Most, however, are quickly-produced documents with limited distribution, such as to the conference attendees. Such forms of "gray literature", while they are in turn cited in later publications, are especially problematical documents to those who try to find them. Listing them in a bibliography is as much a contextual approach as it is one of standardized cataloguing (and standardized citation) procedures.

Sometimes, the titles of a symposium as published reflect an "officially sanctioned language" with which all official transactions and published communications were spoken and published. For example, early meetings of the International Geological Congress used French as their official language; today it is English. Possibly, publications distributed under such sanctions may, in some libraries, be catalogued according to their published titles; others may catalogue them by a standard which conforms to the home-language while taking in a verbatim quotation of the specific title. Thus, for example, the Compte Rendu of the "Sixième Congrès International de Stratigraphie et de Géologie du Carbonifère" may be catalogued as "International Congress of Stratigraphy and Carboniferous Geology, 6th, Compte Rendu" or "Congrès International de Stratigraphie et de Géologie du Carbonifère, 6th, Compte Rendu", depending upon the cataloguing scheme.

The permutations seem endless. In the matter of a disclaimer, some citations have been taken on the authority of other researchers, whose citations may not be whole or precise; these have been cited in this bibliography in the best-adapted format. The following should be construed to be only examples; they do not necessarily encompass all such kinds of publications cited in this bibliography.

Internet Citations

Internet citations are excluded from this bibliography. At this time, documents posted on the World Wide Web and other electronically accessible resources, as well as the sites at which they are posted, are too ephemeral to guarantee that they will remain accessible as listed. Until such time that centralized electronic archives are widespread and reliable, Internet postings will be overlooked.

SPECIAL NOTE ABOUT MISSING INFORMATION

This bibliography is always a work in progress. In a few places, informational parts of a citation include an underscore, thus: _____. This means that the information is missing. Nevertheless, enough information is present to warrant including the citation in this bibliography. Because the compilers have yet to find the missing information, users who have access to the information are encouraged to pass it along, with the thanks of the compilers and the Grand Canyon Association.

The bibliography lists more than 22,500 items produced between 1540 and the present. It includes books, periodicals, serials, maps, audio-visual works, and electronic media in 34 subject areas. Coverage includes the Grand Canyon of Arizona and the lower Colorado River corridor between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and the Colorado River delta in Mexico. Greatly expanded and revised from earlier editions published by Grand Canyon Natural History Association.
Internet edition first released January 2000.

The Table of Contents that follows has been retrieved from the first capture of this website by the Internet Archive's Wayback Machine on 22 October 2000. The blue hyperlinks here have been redirected to the sections of the present document. With a few exceptions, the organization of the Internet Edition remained the same during 2000-2015; only the content was frequently revised.

Part 34 was removed from the Internet Edition in 2001.

Part 33 was removed from THE GRAND CANON in 2009.

Part 25 was removed and reincorporated into Volume 2 of THE GRAND CANON (Cartobibliography) in 2021.

Users of later and current editions of THE GRAND CANON will see improved modifications to the topical organization of the bibliography. (Again, what appears here reflects the organization of the Internet Edition.)

The entire content of the first state of the Internet Edition follows the Table of Contents.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES AND INDICES

1. BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Bibliographies and indices that include the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River region

Every bibliography and reference list has its good and bad points; each is designed to serve a different purpose and audience. The citations given here are those which relate directly to the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River, or which include sufficient references on the region to make them a valuable supplementary or alternate contemporary resource to the present bibliography. Other bibliographies also extend their coverage beyond the limits of the present bibliography.

GENERAL AND SPECIAL INTEREST SUBJECTS

2. GENERAL

General, historical, and "popular" works, including regional geography, non-fictional literature, and biographical material relating to the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River corridor between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and the Colorado River delta in Mexico

This part includes all literature that broadly addresses the Grand Canyon-lower Colorado River region as well as specifically focused literature. It includes material written for a popular audience as well as scholarly publications that deal at least in part with the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River. Material that may otherwise be classified as "Miscellaneous" is also in this part of the bibliography. Travel literature that is more travelogue in presentation is included in this part, but travel publications that are incremental guides to attractions and informational guides to accommodations and services will be found in 9. Travel.

3. NEW YORK TIMES

Grand Canyon articles and reports in The New York Times from 1857

The New York Times is widely available on microfilm. Its comprehensive and authoritative editorial view of national affairs, as well as its traditionally well-respected reporting, make it a useful resource on national perspectives of events and issues in the Southwest. The longevity of this newspaper also allows it to serve as a Grand Canyon-Colorado River bibliography back to the time of the first expeditions to the canyon by Joseph C. Ives (1857-1858) and John Wesley Powell (1869).

For book reviews, see 30. Reviews.

4. MEMORIALS

Biographical memorials, necrologies, and obituary notices that refer to people of the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River

To browse the memorials by name of the decedent instead of the author, see the separate file, Memorials (By Name of Decedent) [Note added in 2025: This was a separate text file on the website; not updated.]

This part lists only obituary notices and commemorative or retrospective memorials. Such sketches are cited here only if the citationist refers to the Grand Canyon or the Colorado River. A few pertinent miscellaneous biographical sketches of persons prominent in the history of the area are also included. Traditional biographies as books and articles are listed in 2. General. The name of the decedent is added to the end of the citation, with his or her dates where known.

5. VISION-IMPAIRED

Works produced especially for vision-impaired people

This part includes items specifically prepared for the visually impaired. These citations are from the Library of Congress Information System; some publications are available only to those meeting holding-agency eligibility criteria. Dates given are for the printed volume from which the special product was prepared, unless listed otherwise.

See 27. Audio Only for conventional audio recordings.

6. YOUTH

Non-fiction and fiction for younger audiences that includes the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

This part includes all those works traditionally referred to as "juvenile"; it includes works that also can be categorized as appropriate for the "young adult". Both non-fiction and fiction are grouped together in order to provide complete, contiguous coverage in this special literary genre. If the context of the title does not clearly indicate whether the item is fiction or non-fiction, a notation is appended to explain it.

See 26. Audio-Visual for "juvenile"-category films.

7. FICTION

Fiction for adult audiences that includes the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

This part lists only works of fiction, including folklore. However, special-interest subjects that can be considered by many to be works of fiction—such as those relating to UFOs and Creationist topics—are considered to belong either to "general" subjects or to the specific subject to which it purports to belong (e.g. Geology).

See 6. Youth for "juvenile" and "young adult" fiction.

8. VERSE

Poetry and verse about the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

Publications that are both prose and verse are listed here as well as in Part 2. General.

9. TRAVEL

Informational guides to attractions and accommodations of hiking, camping, and land-, water-, and air-travel in the Grand Canyon region and the vicinity of the lower Colorado River (excluding Colorado River guides)

This part includes only those publications that provide route-finding information, seasonal data on accommodations, and time-limited information such as fees—specifically for lodging, restaurants, commercial recreational and educational opportunities, and scenic attractions.

See 2. General for essay-type guides that largely omit information on locations, fees, hours of operation, and other such time-limited information.

See 10. Colorado River Guides for travel guides to the Colorado River.

10. COLORADO RIVER GUIDES

Informational guides to travel on the Colorado River between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and Mexico (excluding geological guides)

This part includes "strip maps" and other such specific guides for travelers.

LOWER COLORADO RIVER CORRIDOR SPECIAL INTEREST SUBJECTS

11. LOWER COLORADO—NATURAL HISTORY

Natural history and geography specifically about the lower Colorado River corridor below Grand Canyon — Lake Mead, Arizona–Nevada, to the Colorado River delta in Mexico

This part includes only those natural history and geography references that are restricted to the lower Colorado River corridor from Lake Mead to the delta. It includes hydrologic investigations of the river itself, as limited to this reach, including studies of that part of Lake Mead which has inundated the lower Grand Canyon. This part also lists natural history studies related to the Salton Sea.

See 2. General for general and historical works pertaining to the lower Colorado River.
See 13. Administration for water-supply issues directly affecting Grand Canyon National Park.
See 21. Geology for surface-water supply documents pertaining to the Colorado River basin.

12. LOWER COLORADO—PROJECTS

Engineering projects and water management issues in the Colorado River corridor below Grand Canyon — Lake Mead, Arizona–Nevada, to the Colorado River delta in Mexico — and proposed projects in the Grand Canyon

This part includes all references that deal with the dams and support facilities in the lower Colorado River, from Hoover Dam to the delta. Also included are documents related to irrigation and flood-control measures in the lower Colorado River; among them are project-specific documents and articles about the Colorado River breakout and the inundation of the Salton sink. As a means to accommodate the literature on proposed dams and diversion structures inside the Grand Canyon, documents relating to them are included in this part.

GRAND CANYON REGION HUMAN AFFAIRS SUBJECTS

13. ADMINISTRATION

Administration of Grand Canyon National Park and adjacent federal lands (including that part of Glen Canyon National Recreation Area between Glen Canyon Dam and Lees Ferry, Arizona)

This part comprises items broadly relating to the administration of the national park and earlier administratively sectioned lands. But it lists more than documents pertaining to bureaucratic procedures and regulations. Also included here are references that pertain to land use practices affecting the politically defined unit; some items relating to historic structures; management documents derived from environmental studies on public lands; public comments on, and responses to, proposed and implemented studies and management decisions; and general articles and published opinions that relate to legislative issues affecting the protection, operation, and public use of the lands of the political unit.

For less similarly related items, see also:
14. Human Affairs for sociological, recreational, and economic analyses of visitation profiles, visitor experiences, and social concerns of authorized concessions in the national park, and for similar analyses of the impact of legislatively mandated operational changes to the economic and power supply mandates of Glen Canyon Dam
15. Health and Safety for issues relating to human health and safety, including those that discuss and contribute to administrative decisions on management issues
18. Environment—Physical Ecology for ecological studies that discuss and contribute to administrative decisions on management issues
19. Environment—Biological for ecological studies relating to management of living organisms
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
21. Geology for physical and geological studies of environment that discuss or contribute to administrative decisions on management issues

14. HUMAN AFFAIRS

Sociological, recreational, educational, and economic issues, commentaries, and analyses relating to the Grand Canyon region

This part lists analytical studies and reports that relate to socio-economic concerns, including visitor appreciation and social "quality of wilderness" studies, and items pertaining to teaching and instruction about the Grand Canyon and Colorado River.

For related items, see also:

13. Administration for public-lands overview and management decision documents that relate to recreation and aesthetics
18. Environment—Physical Ecology for quantitative studies of environmental quality
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents

15. HEALTH AND SAFETY

Issues relating to human health and safety in the Grand Canyon or on the Colorado River through Grand Canyon

This part lists items relating to human health and safety in the national park and immediate vicinity. It also includes documents on accident investigations.

For related items, see also:

3. New York Times for pertinent accounts published in New York Times (e.g., aircraft accidents)
13. Administration for aspects of safety issues that have resulted in discussion or management decisions relating to federally administrated areas
17. Native Americans for material relating to Native American tribes and their relationship with the Grand Canyon after European contact
18. Environment—Physical Ecology for aspects of environmental monitoring of the physical environment
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents

16. ARCHAEOLOGY

Archaeological history and research in the Grand Canyon region, including historical archaeology of nineteenth- and twentieth-century activities

This part includes items that relate to archaeological surveys of cultural artifacts and physical remains, from early human inhabitation of the Grand Canyon region to the remnants of recent historical (nineteenth- and twentieth-century) activities.

Also see 20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents

17. NATIVE AMERICANS

Native Americans of the Grand Canyon and issues relating to Native American activities in the canyon and in the national park

This part includes all documents that pertain to the Havasupai, who live within the physiographic Grand Canyon. Other Native American tribes are included in this part only with respect to their activities in the Grand Canyon, or with respect to their traditional or claimed heritage of the Grand Canyon.

See also:

2. General for publications of broader interest that relate at least in part to Native Americans and the Grand Canyon, including general travel items
16. Archaeology for publications relating to Native Americans prior to European contact, or to archaeological documentation of Native American heritage claims to the Grand Canyon
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
26. Audio-Visual for films and videos that relate at least in part to Native Americans and the Grand Canyon

GRAND CANYON REGION SCIENTIFIC SUBJECTS

18. ENVIRONMENT—PHYSICAL ECOLOGY

Physical, chemical, biophysical, and biochemical aspects of land, water, and atmospheric ecology, and historical aspects of environmental research, relating to the Grand Canyon region and the Colorado River corridor through the Grand Canyon

This part includes studies of biological ecology that are not organismically specific, and environmental studies that have been part of scientific investigations conducted for the purpose of management of public lands in the Grand Canyon region. This part also includes general articles that pertain to environmental issues in the Grand Canyon region.

For items pertaining to natural history in the lower Colorado River corridor, below Lake Mead, see 11. Lower Colorado River—Natural History and 12. Lower Colorado River—Projects.

For related items, see also:

13. Administration for items on policy input, management documents drafted as the result of environmental studies, and public comments on these documents
14. Human Affairs for economic and sociological impacts of dam operations and river flows
15. Health and Safety for human health issues of environment in Grand Canyon and on the Colorado River
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
21. Geology for physical and geological environmental impacts
22. Hydrogeology for environmental impacts to the hydrogeological regime of the Colorado River

19. ENVIRONMENT—BIOLOGY

Organismal biology and biological investigations in the Grand Canyon region and the Colorado River corridor through the Grand Canyon

This part includes documents on biological censuses and the biology of animal, plant, and protist organisms as occurring in the Grand Canyon region. This part also includes biological reports and studies that have been part of scientific investigations conducted for the purpose of environmental management of public lands in the Grand Canyon region.

For items pertaining to natural history in the lower Colorado River corridor below Lake Mead, see:

11. Lower Colorado River—Natural History
12. Lower Colorado River—Projects

For related items, see also:

13. Administration for items on policy input and management documents drafted as the result of environmental studies and public comments on these documents
14. Human Affairs for economic and sociological impacts of dam operations and river flows
15. Health and Safety for human health issues of environment in Grand Canyon and on the Colorado River
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
21. Geology for physical and geological environmental impacts
22. Hydrogeology for environmental impacts to the hydrogeological regime of the Colorado River

20. GCES

Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents produced under the monitoring and research programs of the Glen Canyon Dam Environmental Impact Statement as mandated by Congress
(compiled by Richard D. Quartaroli)

Browse file only. Due to the unconventional format of these informational citations, they are not part of the searchable database.

The Glen Canyon Environmental Studies (GCES) were created to perform as an interagency body under the direction of the U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation. This was in response to a congressional mandate to develop an Environmental Impact Statement on the effects of hydropower production at Glen Canyon Dam on the Colorado River and on the river's riparian community downstream through lower Glen Canyon and the Grand Canyon. The EIS also examined the potential impacts of management decisions on social and economic issues. The GCES went through two phases, and the EIS was completed in 1995. Also see 13. Administration for various management issues and decisions related to the GCES.

The GCES was such an important part of the scientific and cultural study of the Grand Canyon, specifically in the previously little-studied Colorado River corridor, that the products of these studies are a bibliography in their own right. Many of the documents are interdisciplinary, thus also a justification for listing them separately, rather than in several places throughout this bibliography. Historians of science will also notice in this list that some of the subjects were reported in other scientific publications. A few of the reports were also released in their entirety as U.S. Geological Survey Open-File Reports or publications of the National Academy Press; these are itemized here. Most of the reports listed here, and voluminous supporting data, are archived at the Grand Canyon Monitoring and Research Center, Flagstaff, Arizona. Complete information for this list is still being compiled.

Enumerated entries following the sequence for this bibliography do not necessarily pertain to individual reports; some refer to study groups, various reports of which are archived.

21. GEOLOGY

Physical and historical geology of the Grand Canyon region (including groundwater hydrogeology but excluding hydrogeology of the Colorado River and other surface waters)

This part includes works about the geology and paleontology of the Grand Canyon (excluding the hydrogeologic regime of the Colorado River), stratigraphic studies of Grand Canyon's rock units beyond the canyon proper, studies of the structure and tectonics of southwestern North America where embracing the Grand Canyon region, historical investigations of the Cenozoic evolution of the Grand Canyon and the lower Colorado River, and modern groundwater studies of the region.

Also see:
11. Lower Colorado—Natural History for geological works about the lower Colorado River region, Lake Mead, Arizona-Nevada, to the Colorado River delta in Mexico
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
22. Hydrogeology for materials relating to the hydrogeologic regime of the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon
29. Computer Media for specialized products released for use in this environment

22. HYDROGEOLOGY

Hydrogeology of the Colorado River and tributary surface waters in the Grand Canyon — including hydraulic investigations of the river, sedimentary studies in the river corridor, surface-water resources, and hydrogeological investigations relating to proposed engineering projects in the river corridor between Glen Canyon Dam and Lake Mead

This part encompasses all physical studies of the water flow (hydrology) of the Colorado River, applied research on its carried sediment, and the effects of the river's flow on the distribution of sediment on the banks of the river.

Also see:
13. Administration for items on policy input and management documents drafted as the result of environmental studies of the Colorado River
18. Environment—Physical Ecology for items relating to physical ecology as affected by the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon
19. Environment—Biology for items relating to biological ecology as affected by the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
21. Geology for items relating to groundwater hydrology and climatic studies with hydrological applications

23. GEOLOGICAL GUIDES

Geological field guides and road logs for the Grand Canyon and vicinity, and the Colorado River corridor between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and Mexico

This part includes all publications that are intended to serve as geological field guides to routes and specific localities in the Grand Canyon and vicinity. Included among them are all geological guides to the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon.

See 10. Colorado River Guides for base maps and general guides to the Colorado River.

24. GEOLOGIC MAPS

Separately published geologic and special topographic maps of the Grand Canyon region

This list includes only separately published maps, and atlas sheets. For a more comprehensive index to all published geologic maps to 1992 that includes those that were published as figures within publications, see in:

Spamer, Earle E. 1990. Geology of the Grand Canyon: A guide and index to published graphic and tabular data (excluding paleontology). Geological Society of America, Microform Publications 21, 674 pp. (See pp. 124-213.)

25. GENERAL MAPS

Separately published maps, charts, and atlas sheets that include the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River region (excluding geologic and special topographic maps)

There are hundreds of maps that could be listed here, but only those which have come to my attention are included. The catalogues of map dealers include many maps that cover the Southwest; unfortunately, their citations are incomplete and often the illustrations are too small to read pertinent author and publisher data from the map.

Also see entries listed in Official map publications; a historical sketch, and a bibliographical handbook of current maps and mapping services in the United States, Canada, Latin America, France, Great Britain, Germany, and certain other countries, by Walter Thiele, under the direction of A. F. Kuhlman (American Library Association, Chicago, 1938, 356 pp.); and Vegetation maps of North America, compiled by A. W. Küchler and Jack McCormick (International Bibliography of Vegetation Maps, A. W. Küchler, ed., Volume 1, Anton W. Van Bekhoven, Naarden, 453 pp.).

For Colorado River guides (strip maps), see 10. Colorado River Guides.

26. AUDIO-VISUAL

Audio-visual works — photographic sets, motion pictures, videotapes, and compact disks (CDs) relating to the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

For certain tape speeds, ips = inches per second. Names of producing agencies are used for the indexed field. Playing times are given in minutes:seconds.

See also 5. Vision-Impaired for recordings produced specifically for the visually impaired.
See also 29. Computer Media for products designed for use on computers.

27. AUDIO ONLY

Audio works — audio tapes, analog recordings, and audio-only compact disks (CDs) relating to the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River, and orchestral and other musical scores

"Record" is an analog sound recording, or "phonodisc"; 78 rpm (revolutions per minute) format is on 10-inch plastic disks, 45 rpm format is on 7-inch plastic disks, and 33 1/3 rpm format is on 12-inch plastic disks. For tape speeds, ips = inches per second. Except for certain items especially identified to the artist or to the composer of musical works, names of producing agencies are used in the author field. Playing times are given in minutes:seconds.

See also 5. Vision-Impaired for recordings produced specifically for the visually impaired.
See also 27. Audio-Visual for audio-visual materials incorporating Grofé's "Grand Canyon Suite" in its entirety or in selected excerpts.
See also 29. Computer Media for products designed for use on computers.

28. MISCELLANEOUS IMAGERY

Miscellaneous artworks and photographs that are not illustrative material in works of general, historical, literary, or biographical interest, but appear by themselves with or without legend

This part includes only single, extraneous items; for example, a reproduction of a single painting, or folios containing prints only, without accompanying text other than the legend.

See 2. General for more complete and critical material on art and photography of the Grand Canyon-Colorado River region.

29. COMPUTER MEDIA

Computer media that include the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

This part includes items that were released only in a computer-readable format, or in both hardcopy format accompanied by computer-readable versions or additional data in computerized format.

See 26. Audio-Visual and 27. Audio Only for audio-visual and audio-only CDs.

OTHER GUIDES

30. REVIEWS

Critical and brief reviews of books, articles, films, and products about the Grand Canyon or lower Colorado River

To browse the reviews by the title of the work being reviewed instead of the review's author, see the separate file, Reviews (By Title). [Note added in 2025: This was a separate text file on the website; not otherwise updated.]

This part includes critical reviews at length in scholarly publications, as well as favorable promotional reviews in general-interest publications. Product reviews include software.

31. NEWSPAPER GUIDE

Brief guide to newspaper titles of the Grand Canyon region (and a supplemental list for Yuma, Arizona)

Browse file only. Due to the unconventional format of these informational citations, they are not part of the searchable database.

Newspapers are a valuable resource to the historian. Long-running papers of any town or city are important historical documents, but researchers who bask in the thrill of finding the obscure and unusual anecdote, small-town and out-of-print newspapers are a mine of information.

This list of newspapers is not exhaustive, nor is there any guarantee that all of them have had coverage of events or people of the immediate Grand Canyon or lower Colorado River regions. But within these regions it is likely that newspapers published there have had a higher frequency of canyon- and river-related items than the newspapers of more distant places. This list provides a sampling of newspapers of northern Arizona, southern Nevada, and southern Utah. A special supplement to the Arizona list includes newspapers of that crossroads of the far Southwest, Yuma.

32. MARGINALIA

Items not about the Grand Canyon but having a Grand Canyon venue or otherwise borrowing the name "Grand Canyon"

This part contains citations which are themselves not about the Grand Canyon but refer to the Grand Canyon as a venue; for example, meetings and conferences about subjects other than the canyon held at Grand Canyon. While they do not specifically contain information about the canyon, that they took place there makes them peripherally a part of the history of the canyon.

See 33. "Other" Grand Canyons for items relating to other geographical features that use the appellation "Grand Canyon".

33. "OTHER" GRAND CANYONS [Part 33 was removed in 2009.]

Works that refer to other geographic features of the world and elsewhere that use the appellation "Grand Canyon" or make comparisons to the Grand Canyon, and works in which there are metaphorical references to the Grand Canyon

This part lists citations that pertain to other geographic features that include "Grand Canyon" as part of their names; for example, "Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone" or "The Little Grand Canyon". This part also contains: citations of articles that in some way compare the magnitude of other geographic features—on Earth and elsewhere—with the Grand Canyon; cite the Grand Canyon as the superlative chasm of the world; as well as more abstract comparisons, such as "the equatorial Grand Canyon", a concept of global economics. Exception is made here to this bibliography's exclusion of newspaper items; and further, to document the appearance of such items, this part includes such ephemera as advertising flyers, postcards, and some items that we have seen on the Internet, with the realization that the last category is especially ephemeral. For the Internet citations, the date is given for when seen by the compiler. Annotations provide quotations or the context in which the reference to the Grand Canyon appears. This documents all such references and comparisons to the Grand Canyon as have come to the attention of the compiler and contributors. For a published listing, now incomplete, of other known geographic features named "Grand Canyon" and "Colorado River", refer to the article by Corax and Abyssus (1996). The Geographic Names Information System managed by the U.S. Geological Survey is also a useful Internet resource at http://www-nmd.usgs.gov/www/gnis/index.html. The Defense Mapping Agency provides a similar resource for geographic names outside of the United States at http://164.214.2.53/gns/html/index.html.

34. MISCELLANEOUS MANUSCRIPTS [Part 34 was removed in 2001.]

Manuscript materials originally cited in the bibliography or intended for inclusion in the Internet edition; subsequently removed but retained in this part for archival purposes

Earlier editions of this bibliography included some manuscript resources that should not have been cited. It is beyond the purview of this bibliography to list manuscripts and unique copies of reports. When such were originally added, it was believed that they were of sufficiently unique or special interest to warrant listing them; usually, a notation was appended to indicate the reference from which the citation was obtained; this was intended to be a means by which interested readers could refer back to the original citation to establish the context of the citation. These manuscript materials have been deleted from the formal parts of the bibliography, but they are retained in this part so as not to lose useful (even if not comprehensive) information that had been in previous editions. Citations which lack a cross-reference to Monograph 8 are items that were compiled for inclusion in the present edition. In one instance, a copy of an unpublished report appeared in a bookseller's annotated catalogue. For each citation, the part of this Internet edition of the bibliography for which it had been intended is indicated.

THE INTERNET EDITION
(FIRST STATE, JANUARY 2000)

Note*: Many citations in the bibliography were frequently revised in content and format during the period when the Internet Edition was actively added to and emended. And the citations that were incorporated into the new monographic version, THE GRAND CANON, were further amplified. The citations as listed in the following sections are the complete record as included in the Internet Edition's database in January 2000.

1. BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Bibliographies and indexes that include the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River region

Every bibliography and reference list has its good and bad points; each is designed to serve a different purpose and audience. The citations given here are those which relate directly to the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River, or which include sufficient references on the region to make them a valuable supplementary or alternate contemporary resource to the present bibliography. Other bibliographies also extend their coverage beyond the limits of the present bibliography.

2. GENERAL

General, historical, and "popular" works, including regional geography, non-fictional literature, and biographical material relating to the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River corridor between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and the Colorado River delta in Mexico

This section includes all literature that broadly addresses the Grand Canyon-lower Colorado River region as well as specifically focused literature. It includes material written for a popular audience as well as scholarly publications that deal at least in part with the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River. Material that may otherwise be classified as "Miscellaneous" is also in this part of the bibiography. Travel literature that is more travelogue in presentation is included in this part, but travel publications that are incremental guides to attractions and informational guides to accommodations and services will be found in 9. Travel.

3. THE NEW YORK TIMES

Grand Canyon articles and reports in The New York Times from 1857

The New York Times is widely available on microfilm. Its comprehensive and authoritative editorial view of national affairs, as well as its traditionally well-respected writing, makes it a useful resource on national perspectives of events and issues in the Southwest. The longevity of this newspaper also allows it to serve as a Grand Canyon-Colorado River bibliography back to the time of the first expeditions on the Colorado by Joseph C. Ives (1857-1858) and John Wesley Powell (1869).

For book reviews, see 30. Reviews.

4. MEMORIALS

Biographical memorials, necrologies, and obituary notices that refer to the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River

This part lists only obituary notices and commemorative or retrospective memorials, listed by author. Such sketches are cited here only if the citationist refers to the Grand Canyon or the Colorado River. A few pertinent miscellaneous biographical sketches of prominent persons in the history of the area are also included. Traditional biographies as books and articles are listed in 2. General. The name of the decedent is added to the end of the citation, with his or her dates where known.

To browse the memorials by name of the decedent, see the separate file, Memorials (By Name of Decedent).

6. YOUTH

Non-fiction and fiction for younger audiences that includes the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

This part includes all those works traditionally referred to as "juvenile"; it includes works that also can be categorized as appropriate for the "young adult". Both non-fiction and fiction are grouped together in order to provide complete, contiguous coverage in this special literary genre. If the context of the title does not clearly indicate whether the item is fiction or non-fiction, a notation is appended to explain it.

See 26. Audio-Visual for "juvenile"-category films.

7. FICTION

Fiction for adult audiences that includes the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

This part lists only works of fiction, including folklore. However, special-interest subjects that can be considered by many to be works of fiction—such as those relating to UFOs and Creationist topics—are considered to belong either to "general" subjects or to the specific subject to which it purports to belong (e.g. Geology).

See 6. Youth for "juvenile"-category and young-reader fiction.

Vernon writes, "The item was last seen in my novel floating down the Colorado River toward (what else?) the Grand Canyon." However, the novel does not cite there these geographic names. Here we have an instance of an author elaborating later on implied expressions of a work of fiction. Grand Canyon Stage Line no date 9.153 Grand Canyon Stage Line; the Ash Fork route, open all the year round. The Grand Canyon of the Colorado River in Arizona. How to reach the most scenic views[,] the exquisite water falls, etc. of Cataract Canyon[,] the Yava Supai villages[,] cliff dwellings, etc. Ash Fork, Arizona: Grand Canyon Stage Line, 24 pp. [including covers]. [Sometimes cited as by William Wallace Bass, proprietor of the stage line, and who no doubt did produce this; but bibliographically, his name does not appear as author. On p. 9, the name of the stage company appears as "Grand Canyon Stage Company". Printed by The Hicks-Judd Co., San Francisco. Regarding the date of publication: On the back cover is an advertisement for books, photographs, and lantern slides of the Grand Canyon, available from W. W. Bass, Ash Fork, or from Grand Canyon Photo Co., Pasadena, California; there is also notice of G[eorge]. Wharton James' The Grand Canyon of the Colorado River, said there to be "now in the press" and which was published in 1900. The Special Collections and Archives (SCA), Cline Library, Northern Arizona University, Flagstaff, hold the original of a photo of a Havasupai mother with child next to a wickiup (photo 91.15.18), which is another view of the one published in the Grand Canyon Stage Line booklet (p. 16); the date for it is given by SCA as 1899. Thus, the date of this booklet is most likely latter 1899 or early 1900. —Spamer] <Mon. 8: 1-SS1-6>

Natural history and geography specifically about the lower Colorado River corridor below Grand Canyon — Lake Mead, Arizona–Nevada, to the Colorado River delta in Mexico

This part includes only those natural history and geography references which are restricted to the lower Colorado River corridor from Lake Mead to the delta. It includes hydrologic investigations of the river itself, as limited to this reach, including studies of that part of Lake Mead which has inundated the lower Grand Canyon. This part also lists natural history studies related to the Salton Sea.

See 2. General for general and historical works pertaining to the lower Colorado River.
See 13. Administration for water-supply issues directly affecting Grand Canyon National Park.
See 21. Geology for surface-water supply documents pertaining to the Colorado River basin.

12. LOWER COLORADO—PROJECTS

Engineering projects and water management issues in the Colorado River corridor below Grand Canyon — Lake Mead, Arizona–Nevada, to the Colorado River delta in Mexico — and proposed projects in the Grand Canyon

This part includes all references which deal with the dams and support facilities in the lower Colorado River, from Hoover Dam to the delta. Also included are documents related to irrigation and flood-control measures in the lower Colorado River; among them are project-specific documents and articles about the Colorado River breakout and the inundation of the Salton sink. As a means to accommodate the literature on proposed dams and diversion structures inside the Grand Canyon, documents relating to them are included in this part.
